On the occasion of the first edition of the Milan Digital Week, (four days open for all citizens, including debates, exhibitions, curiosities, seminars, performances, shows, workshops, training courses and workshops to discover the most Unexpected digital Milan), on March 15th at 7.30pm and until March 18th, Futuro Presente is inaugurated, a photographic exhibition curated by Artsfor at the Base spaces in Milan.

The project analyzes the digital transformation through the stories of 20 internationally renowned photographers who tell the consequences of technology on people, the changes in society between present and future, science, progress related to man's identity, culture. Over 300 photographs projected on 5 giant screens define a journey of images and music that aims to bring the viewer closer to discovering original and surprising projects to tell a reality-morphing in continuous evolution.

We move from Sophia to Giulio di Sturco, the most sophisticated humanoid so far built and the first to be recognized as a citizen to Alberto Giuliani who, with Surviving Humanity, explores the future of humanity, climate change, demography, migration and wars.

Ways of knowing is instead the project with which Daniel Stier analyzes the real world of scientific research while Stephanie Buret in Futuristic Utopia tells Songdo, 60Km from Seoul, South Korea, the first city in the world conceived for morphology and construction technology as a real "Smart city": functional, technologically advanced, completely connected and ecological.

In short, a vastness of innovative, experimental ideas that plumb the immensity of the near future starting from the present one.
